Food Prices Soar in China, Threatening Social Unrest

Costs in Largest Cities Rose 27% Last Month in Blow to Inflation Fight

By Kevin Murphy
International Herald Tribune

HONG KONG — Despite China's campaign to rein in inflation, urban consumer prices are escalating at a 27.4 percent clip, the government reported Tuesday, raising fresh doubts that Beijing can stem rising food costs before they threaten social stability.

Just last month, Prime Minister Li Peng declared that fighting inflation was the government's top priority, and other officials have insisted they were making progress.

But the government's report of economic figures for September in 35 big cities provided little evidence that the spiraling cost of living would slow anytime soon.

Food prices rose at a particularly rapid pace. Grain soared 63 percent in September compared with a year ago. In August, grain climbed 60 percent from a year earlier.

Fresh vegetables, the particular target of recent government efforts to limit price increases, also were more expensive in September, rising 55 percent, compared with a 49 percent increase the previous month.

Beijing is worried that the rising prices for basic foods could spark social instability of the sort that contributed to the pro-democracy protests that were put down by military force in June 1989.

Retail prices, which are consumer prices excluding services, rose 24.6 percent compared with a year ago, after a 22.6 percent hike in August.

Qin Xiaohua, chief economist of the State Statistical Bureau, blamed the price increases on higher costs for farmers, natural disasters that damaged agricultural output and a devaluation of China's currency.

"But that doesn't mean I am optimistic about inflation," Mr. Qin said, according to a Bloomberg Business News report. "We should adopt effective measures to see CHINA, Page 4

Assad Assails Pact, but 'Will Not Make a Big Fuss'

By Michael Georgy
New York Times Service

CAIRO — President Hafez Assad of Syria condemned the draft peace agreement Tuesday between Israel and Jordan and said Jordan committed blasphemy by agreeing to lease part of its land back to Israel.

But Mr. Assad said Syria would not try to obstruct peace between Israel and its Arab neighbors. "We have told them you have made a big mistake but we will not make a big fuss," he said.

"Our land is ours," he said after a meeting with President Hosni Mubarak of Egypt. "We consider it would be blasphemy for any country to speak of renting its land to Israel."

Under the terms of the draft treaty initiated Monday, Jordan will take back land occupied by Israel in 1967 and then lease some of it to Israel.

The agreement has effectively undermined Syria's stance in the Middle East peace talks.

"Nobody wants to isolate Assad," said a Western diplomat. "But Assad felt he was in the driver's seat one or two years ago."

He is still very important but he has lost some control now that Israel and Jordan have signed."

Negotiations between Israel and Syria have been deadlocked over the extent of an Israeli pullout from the strategic Golan Heights. Mr. Assad said he and Mr. Mubarak discussed Secretary of State Warren M. Christopher's recent attempts to find a compromise. But Mr. Assad suggested no breakthrough had been reached.

The Associated Press reported from Jerusalem.

Israeli and Jordanian negotiators met in the Red Sea port of Aqaba to settle fine points left open in the accord, including demarcation of borders as well as transportation and customs arrangements.

The draft agreement, which would end 46 years of conflict between Israel and Jordan, was reached after a grueling all-night session that resolved long-standing disputes over water rights and borders.

It was expected to be ratified quickly by the countries' legislatures and signed Oct. 26 on the Jordan-Israel border in a ceremony to be attended by President Bill Clinton. (Page 2)

Balladur Image Jolted by Probes And Infighting

By William Drozdiak
Washington Post Service

PARIS — Only a month ago, the presidential fortunes of France's prime minister, Edouard Balladur, looked unassailable. He was riding high in opinion polls, the economy was starting to perk up and even his political foes admitted that he loomed as the most likely successor to President François Mitterrand, a Socialist.

But within a matter of weeks, Mr. Balladur has come close to being knocked off his patrician pedestal. His center-right government is being ripped apart by judicial inquiries and political intrigue, as cabinet ministers fight to stay out of jail or draw battle lines behind Mr. Balladur or his rival, the Gaullist party chief and mayor of Paris, Jacques Chirac.

Two ministers have resigned, under investigation on corruption charges, and four more are believed under investigation by prosecuting magistrates for "abusing the social trust." In addition, aides to the prime minister say they suspect the timing of the scandals and the forthcoming presidential campaign are not unrelated.

Alain Carignon and Gérard Longuet, the two ministers who stepped down, were close allies of Mr. Balladur's who were considered important to his strategy of grooming a new political coalition after the presidential election that could replace the old conservative parties. These parties are beholden to the ambitions of Mr. Chirac and the former president, Valéry Giscard d'Estaing.

Even though Mr. Balladur's personal

MOSCOW (AFP) — Prime Minister Viktor S. Chernomyrdin of Russia on Tuesday denied a report that he had offered to resign.

"Mr. Chernomyrdin is on vacation and this is absurd," said Sergei Surov, a spokesman for the prime minister. "I can assure you 100 percent that this report does not correspond to reality."

His remarks came after the radio station Echo Moscow reported that Mr. Chernomyrdin had given his resignation to President Boris N. Yeltsin. Echo Moscow is known for accurate reporting on government affairs and its report was also broadcast by an independent Russian television station.

With Truce, an Eerie Normalcy Takes Hold in Belfast

By John Darnton
New York Times Service

BELFAST — Since midnight on Thursday, when a full cease-fire descended on both the Protestant and Catholic sides, Belfast has been quiet.

It's an eerie feeling for people who had developed techniques for survival, like checking the undercarriage of the car for a bomb before turning on the ignition or looking for strangers before stepping out of a doorway, which, after 25 years of sectarian strife, became as natural as ties.

The police report that there has been no political violence since the Protestant paramilitary groups announced their cease-fire to match one declared by the Catholic Irish Republican Army on Sept. 1. The "incidents room" of the Royal Ulster Constabulary, normally buzzing with activity, has been virtually shut down.

Normalcy comes in small ways. In Falls Road, a Catholic section of West Belfast, people are even joking that they may soon have to pay the license fee of about $120 for each television set.

Up to now inspectors found it too dangerous to enforce the law, so "free" television became a minor perk of "the Troubles."

But the ritual of transportation, which can be bewildering to an outsider, has not changed. On Castle Street, there is a master point for large black taxis, but they go only into the Catholic area. Farther on, along North Street, are the Protestant taxis for the Shankill Road area. Roaming the streets are radio cabs for the "mixed" areas, but these cannot be flagged down.

"Nobody hails a cab in this town," said Martin O'Brien, a worker with the civil rights organization called Committee for the Administration of Justice. "Too many drivers have died by going into the wrong areas. That's not going to change for a long time."

A spot check of drivers suggested he was right. "No way I'm going to the Shankill," said a Catholic driver, Tom, who was reluctant to provide a surname. "Even if they don't shoot you, they'll still go at you with baseball bats."

The last incident of note in the police log happened at 8:30 P.M. on Thursday. It was a kidnapping carried out by

Gangsters Have Their Hands Deep in Japan's Financial Pockets

By James Sterngold
New York Times Service

TOKYO — Few in Japan had heard of Gifu Shogin, a small credit association about 300 kilometers west of Tokyo, before the Japanese government forced it to merge with another local financial institution several months ago.

But then a stunning fact was disclosed: Of Gifu Shogin's $110 million in outstanding loans, about $70 million worth was made to organized-crime groups or their affiliated companies.

As a four-year-long collapse of property prices takes its toll on lenders, the government has had to engineer a series of increasingly large rescues of ailing banks. But the bailout of Gifu Shogin may have said the most about the roots of the Japanese banking industry's troubles, and the problems in trying to resolve them.

Over the last several years, since the so-called bubble economy of the 1980s burst and stock and property prices plummeted, evidence of heavy involvement of organized-crime groups with supposedly legitimate companies has slipped out.

This has been particularly true in the real estate business, where gangsters, known as yakuza, have long been used to muscle reluctant landowners into selling parcels or to force tenants out of buildings.

But several recent examples have made it clear that the ties with the yakuza were neither isolated nor short-term, and that they may be presenting one of the greatest challenges to bankers and government officials struggling to restore the financial system's health.

Gifu Shogin became the first rescue in which Japanese police were called in both to guarantee the safety of the new executives and to help collect the bad loans. Most experts now expect cleaning up Gifu Shogin to be long, difficult — and perhaps violent.

"Gifu Shogin was, in one respect, a financial source for organized crime," said Yoshio Aokawa, an official of Kansai Kogin, the credit association that undertook the rescue. "We agreed to the merger because it was our duty. But we are demanding assurances of our security."

In the most blatant sign of how bloody the problems could become, Kazumasa Hananaka, 54, manager of the Sumitomo Bank's Nagoya branch and a member of the board, was shot in the head, execution style, and died in front of his apartment on Sept. 14. The crime was a shock to a country where guns are almost completely unobtainable, except by gangsters.

Sumitomo Bank, one of the most prestigious banks in Japan, has had a string of problems that are believed related to gangsters, from firebombings to cut telephone lines. And Sumitomo is not alone.

"If you look at the evidence, it does seem to be a very prominent feature of the landscape with banking institutions," said Alicia Ogawa, a banking analyst in Tokyo with Salomon Brothers Asia.

Raisuke Miyawaki, a former head of the organized-crime division at the National Police Agency and now a corporate adviser, said he believed loans to the yakuza were at the heart of the bad-debt problem.

"During the bubble years, companies became very nonchalant about organized-crime contacts, from top to bottom," he said. "All sorts of relationships were built up, not just in real estate."

In one case, Tomosaburo Koyama, vice president of Hanwa Bank, a regional institution, was shot and killed on his way to work in August 1993. No one has been arrested, but the police said they believed it was the work of professionals.

Several years ago, the chairman of Nomura Securities, the largest brokerage house in the world, ac-

Queen Finds A Deserted Red Square

MOSCOW — Queen Elizabeth arrived in a nearly deserted Red Square on Tuesday, in an embarrassing mix-up in which Russian security forces reportedly were told to keep people out of the square. But aides said that neither local chaos nor royal woes piling up at home could blight the queen's historic visit to Russia.

"President Yeltsin decided he wanted to show the queen more of Red Square than originally intended, so security were told to keep it clear of people," an angered British Embassy official said.

A few hundred well-wishers were hastily allowed up to barriers to talk to the queen, as President Boris Yeltsin showed her and her husband, Prince Philip, around.

Early on Tuesday the queen, with Mr. Yeltsin, laid a wreath at graves of World War II victims to mark the two countries' wartime alliance, before touring the palaces and cathedrals behind the Kremlin's walls.

Royal Divorce in the Works? Palace Denies French Magazine Report

LONDON — Buckingham Palace denied reports in a French magazine Tuesday that Prince Charles and his estranged wife, Diana, were planning to divorce early next year in a settlement that would bring her a fortune.

"As was stated quite clearly when their separation was announced in December 1992, the prince and princess had no plans to divorce," the palace said in a statement. "That remains the position."

A joint statement issued by lawyers for the couple said there was "no truth" in the reports of an impending divorce that electrified the British media on Tuesday.

The brash Paris weekly Voici, quoting what it claimed were excerpts from a new biography of Diana, said that the feuding royals would end their marriage in March and that the princess would be paid nearly $25 million in a settlement.

Diana, reported to be devastated by Charles's revelation in his own authorized biography that he had never loved her, is quoted as saying that she felt used and abused by the royal palace.

One excerpt from the book said the princess compared her royal role to that of "the biggest prostitute in the world."

"I am a POW," Diana is quoted as saying by the magazine, "prisoner of Wales." Voici said that as part of the divorce agreement, Diana would have access to her sons, William, 12, and Harry, 10, who are in boarding school, but she would renounce all claims to the throne and relinquish most of her jewels. In return she will receive a house in London worth about $10 million and a country house in either France or Wales.

The magazine said all of the divorce details are included in Andrew Morton's new book, "Diana, Her New Life," to be published on Nov. 15. Mr. Morton's latest volume to spotlight the royal family's fractured fairytale.

The publishers of the new book, Michael O'Mara Books Ltd., said the magazine story contained elements of the book.

"It also includes substantial distortions and falsehoods, especially with regard to the question of divorce and the legal settlement for the Prince and Princess of Wales," the company said in a statement.

The publishers said that a Voici employee, Luis Alvarez Gomez, was arrested by the Paris police Monday and that he had a stolen manuscript of Mr. Morton's new book.

But a spokesman for Voici, Marc Rassat, denied the manuscript had been stolen. "There is no question of a theft," Mr. Rassat said. "This is a scoop, and there is nothing unusual about that."

He said the magazine's information had come from its own staff as well as from Mr. Morton's book, which Mr. Rassat said was obtained through "journalistic means."

It is not known if Diana cooperated on Mr. Morton's latest work.

Crusading Moscow Reporter Is Killed By Bomb in Midst of Corruption Probe

By Fred Hiatt
Washington Post Service
MOSCOW — An investigative reporter for Moscow's most popular newspaper has been killed in a bomb blast in what Moscow authorities called "an unprecedented terrorist act," escalating the growing violence against journalists.

Dmitri Kholodov, 27, who had reported on corruption in the military and other sensitive topics, was killed in his office in the Moskovsky Komsomolets newsroom. Another reporter was slightly injured.

The blast Monday occurred shortly after Mr. Kholodov returned to the newspaper with a briefcase that he had told colleagues he would be collecting from a source in Russia's domestic intelligence agency, his editor said.

"This is a political crime against journalists and against freedom of speech," said Pavel

Gusev, the newspaper's editor in chief. "There are forces who want to intimidate journalists and teach them not to stick their noses into where it smells of big money and big crime."

With crime and corruption increasing at many levels of Russian society, contract murders and beatings have become almost commonplace. Bankers and businessmen are often targets, but prosecutors, officials and journalists also have been attacked.

The apparent murder of Mr. Kholodov was the most brazen attack yet on a journalist, reaching into the heart of a newspaper that has become a symbol of the new Russia by virtue of its audacity, iconoclasm and cynicism.

President Boris N. Yeltsin was shocked by news of the killing.

Mr. Kholodov had worked at the newspaper for four years, covering many of the major crises following the breakup of the Soviet Union, Mr. Gusev said.

Recently, the reporter had been investigating alleged arms trafficking by Russian Army officers while based in Germany. He had received several death threats in connection with these reports, Mr. Gusev said.

Mr. Kholodov had told colleagues that an employee of the Federal Counterintelligence Service, successor to the KGB, had been talking with him for some time and had finally agreed to give him documents. The reporter said he had been told the documents would be left for him in a luggage locker in a Moscow railway station.

Mr. Gusev said he did not know whom Mr. Kholodov met, if anyone, in the train station. But he said the reporter returned with an attache case, which contained what the editor called a professionally made bomb.

Last Power Plant At Chernobyl Shut For Cracked Pipe

KIEV — Ukraine shut the remaining reactor at the Chernobyl power plant, site of the world's worst nuclear accident, for a week because of a cracked pipe, officials announced Tuesday.

An officer for the State Committee on Nuclear Safety said the third reactor was closed Monday after a small crack was noticed in a pipe carrying steam to turbines.

The accident was registered at zero on the international seven-point scale and there was no rise in radiation.

The plant's first reactor — the only other one functioning at the stricken plant — was closed Oct. 8 for maintenance.

Parliament reversed a pledge last year to close Chernobyl by the end of 1993. The country's leaders say $4 billion to $6 billion is needed to close the installation and find alternative power sources.

German Ex-Communists Discard the Past

By Stephen Kinzer
New York Times Service

BERLIN — Germany's jubilant former Communists, flush with their victories in parliamentary elections, insisted Tuesday that their party had left its repressive past behind and was prepared to work constructively within the existing political system.

"Stalinism is no longer an option," said the party leader, Lothar Bisky, referring to the Communist Party that ruled East Germany for 40 years.

The former Communists, who now call themselves Democratic Socialists, horrified the political establishment Sunday by winning four head-to-head parliamentary races, all of them in East Berlin. That showing qualified them for 30 seats in the 672-member Parliament.

During their campaign, the Democratic Socialists called their candidates a "colorful troupe," and the 30 legislators they will send to Bonn live up to that description.

One of the new stars of the party is Stefan Heym, an 81-year-old writer of Jewish descent who served in the U.S. Army during World War II and who holds American as well as German citizenship. As the oldest member of Parliament, he will give the opening speech when it convenes next month.

'We will be anything but a boringly unified faction.'

Among others elected on the Democratic Socialist ticket were Günther Maletzke, former president of the rubber-stamp East German Parliament; Gerhard Zwerenz, a writer known for steamy sex scenes; Heinrich von Einsiedel, an aristocrat who is a great-grandson of Otto von Bismarck; Christina Schenk, one of Germany's most outspoken lesbians; and Christa Luft, a Marxist economist who was once the East German minister of economics.

"We will naturally have differing opinions," said the party's leading figure, Gregor Gysi, a sharp-tongued lawyer whose father was East Germany's minister of culture. "We will be anything but a boringly unified faction."

The former Communists campaigned as the voice of Eastern Germany, and clearly profited from widespread resentment there about the way German unification has been managed. But nine of the 30 men and women who will represent the party in Parliament are from Western Germany, and party leaders said after the election that they hoped to broaden their appeal and become a national political force.

Chancellor Helmut Kohl probably helped the ex-Communists by attacking them vigorously during the campaign.

He called them "red-painted fascists" and denounced Mr. Gysi as "the personification of political cynicism."

Many Eastern voters wanted to show their anger with Chancellor Kohl, and after hearing these attacks they voted for the ex-Communists rather than for the principal opposition party, the Social Democrats.

A former East German dissident and outgoing member of Parliament, Konrad Weiss, called the ex-Communists' success at the polls "unbearable and shameful."

"Many people in Eastern Germany seem to have forgotten the total repression, the murders at the wall and the Stasi spying," Mr. Weiss said.

But Joscha Fischer, who was elected to Parliament as a Green, said he would be willing to deal with ex-Communists.

"These are elected legislators with democratic mandates," he said. "We cannot have first-class and second-class legislators."

FOR THOSE SEEKING MORE THAN ONE DIMENSION TO TIME...

"A watch is just a watch, so long as it tells the time." It's the kind of statement that makes us all the more determined to safeguard one of life's irreplaceable pleasures — the multi-dimensional time of complicated watches.

For more than 150 years we have been making timepieces for men and women who see beyond ordinary time. Einstein owned a watch made by us fig. 1, so did Tchaikovsky, Wagner, Marie Curie and Charlotte Brontë. Each of them — whether scientist, musician or writer — had the rare gift of being able to exploit time as a creative element in their work.

Today we are still recognized as the only watchmakers whose timepieces adequately convey a sense of outstanding personal achievement. We can rise to your greatest occasion with a total of 33 horological complications — far beyond the capabilities of any other watchmaker. Our Calibre 89, the most complicated portable timepiece ever built fig. 2, expresses the full scope of time: astronomical time — from a star chart geared to the apparent movement of the heavens, to the times of sunrise and sunset; seasonal time, sidereal time and the equation of time fig. 3; long time in the 400-year cycle of the Gregorian calendar; short time with a split-seconds chronograph; the sound of time in a Grand Strike, chiming the hours and quarters, in passing, on a Westminster carillon; spiritual time in the date of Easter; and time that escapes gravity in the tourbillon escapement.

If you find the Calibre 89 a little inconvenient for everyday use, our watchmakers have brought together the more essential complications in a number of wristwatches. You can be assured that each represents the finest watchmaking in the world.

You may find your most treasured possession in the handsome tonneau-shaped, perpetual-calendar watch fig. 4. The unique combination of a fly-back date-hand showing the progression of the month, and a minute-repeater, is a refinement that took us about four years to develop.

You will appreciate that there are no half measures in complicated watchmaking. We are building precision timekeeping instruments that you will expect to perform faithfully for a century or more. In our self-winding, perpetual-calendar wristwatches fig. 5, our own design and superlative craftsmanship ensure that the calendar mechanism absorbs an infinitesimal amount of power as it smoothly changes the day, date and month, records the quarters of the day and the leap-year cycle. The moon-phase in our perpetual calendars is extremely precise, taking 122 years and 45 days to accumulate the hardly discernible variation of a single day.

Our perpetual-calendar and chronograph combination fig. 6 finds particular favour among collectors who enjoy the finer points of mechanical watchmaking. Through the sapphire-crystal caseback, you can admire the exquisite hand-finish of our movements and bring into play the precisely coordinated actions of the column-wheel, levers and gears fig. 7.

Impeccable workmanship is taken for granted by those who wear our watches. But if you choose one of the half-dozen or so slim, self-winding, perpetual-calendar repeaters fig. 8 that we complete each year, you can expect much more. We have encapsulated in our most sophisticated wristwatch the ancient and authentic sound of time. Celebrate a moment — any moment — by making the mechanism ring the hours, quarters and minutes with the pure, clear resonance that only we have been able to achieve in a minute-repeater.

Those who consider a watch is just a watch, so long as it tells the time, will be gratified to learn that in this elegant wristwatch fig. 9, time is told both by a minute-repeater and by an observatory-rated chronometer. In it moves the most ingenious compensation device known to horological engineering. The rotating tourbillon cage literally absolves the watch's regulator from the laws of gravity — removing one of the last obstacles to the final frontier of mechanical precision.

But if you seek that extra dimension to time, to mark your achievement, to inspire your creativity or simply to enjoy sublime watchmaking, you will almost certainly wear one of our timepieces one day. You will then come to recognize the touch of the world's finest watchmakers fig. 10, and know that the name on the dial can only be Patek Philippe.

In Patek Philippe wristwatches, the buckle and the hidden pins that secure the strap are of gold.

Sales figures are unaffected. Yearly highs and lows reflect the previous 52 weeks plus the current week, but not the latest week. The yearly high and low stock prices are determined to 25 percent or more has been paid, the year's high-low range and the year's average stock price. The year's high-low range is the normal, rates of dividends are annual calculations based on:

- a - dividend also extra(s).
- b - dividend declared or paid in preceding 12 months.
- c - including dividend.
- d - not including dividend.
- e - called.
- f - not a yearly low.
- g - dividend declared or paid in preceding 12 months.
- h - in order to indicate that subject is 10% non-revivable.
- i - dividend declared after split or as stock dividend.
- j - dividend paid this year, omitted, deferred, or no action taken.
- k - dividend declared or paid this year, on accumulative basis.
- l - no new issue in the past 52 weeks. The high-low range being paid - last day delivery.
- m - last day delivery.
- n - last day delivery.
- o - dividend declared or paid in preceding 12 months, plus stock dividend.
- p - dividend declared or paid in preceding 12 months, plus stock dividend.
